The hardest part of practising English speaking is often just finding something to talk about. This is a ready-made library of conversation topics, each with questions you can answer right away — grouped by level and by situation.

How to use it: pick a topic, answer all its questions out loud in full sentences, then push one answer further with a "why" or "for example." Don't just think the answers — say them. Speaking out loud is what builds fluency. Start at your level, and move up when the questions feel easy. You can do these alone, with a partner, or with an AI speaking partner.

Beginner topics (A1–A2)

Start here if you can make simple sentences. These stay concrete — your own life, in the present, past, and near future.

Daily routine: What time do you wake up? What do you do in the morning? What's your favourite part of the day?

Family: How many people are in your family? Who are you closest to? What do you do together?

Food: What did you eat today? What's your favourite dish? Can you cook? What do you want to try?

Home: Where do you live? What's your favourite room? What's near your home?

Hobbies: What do you do in your free time? How did you start? Who do you do it with?

Weather & seasons: What's the weather like today? What's your favourite season? What do you do when it rains?

Work or study: What do you do? What do you like about it? What's a normal day like?

Friends: Who is your best friend? How did you meet? What do you like to do together?

Intermediate topics (B1–B2)

For these, give opinions and reasons, not just facts. Aim for 3–4 sentences per answer.

Travel: What's the best place you've visited? How do you prefer to travel? Where would you go with unlimited money, and why?

Technology: How has your phone changed your life? Could you live without social media? Is technology making us closer or more distant?

Health & fitness: How do you stay healthy? Has your lifestyle changed over the years? What habit would you like to build?

Money: Do you prefer saving or spending? What's worth paying more for? How do you decide on a big purchase?

Education: What was your favourite subject and why? Is it better to learn online or in a classroom? What skill do you wish schools taught?

City life: What do you like about where you live? City or countryside — which suits you? How has your city changed?

Entertainment: What do you watch or listen to? How do you choose what's worth your time? Has what you enjoy changed as you've got older?

Work: What makes a good manager? Would you prefer to work from home or an office? What does your ideal job look like?

Advanced topics (C1–C2)

These are abstract — argue a position, weigh both sides, and use linking language to structure your thoughts.

Society: Is society becoming more or less equal? What social change would you most like to see? Do individuals or governments do more to shape a country?

Culture: How does culture shape the way people communicate? Is globalisation good or bad for local traditions? What does your culture value most?

Career & success: How do you define success? Is passion or stability more important in a career? Will AI change the jobs of the future — and how?

Environment: Who is most responsible for solving climate change? Would you give up conveniences to help the planet? Are individual actions enough?

Ethics & choices: Is it ever acceptable to break a rule? Should some things never be for sale? How do you make a hard decision?

The future: What will daily life look like in 30 years? Are you optimistic or pessimistic about the future? What technology worries you?

Values: What matters more — freedom or security? Has social media changed what we value? What advice would you give your younger self?

Topics by situation

Sometimes you need language for a specific moment. Practise these the way you'll actually use them.

Small talk: How was your weekend? Any plans for the holidays? Did you see the game / the news? How's work going?

At work & in meetings: Can you give a quick update on your project? What do you think we should prioritise? Could you clarify that point? I'd like to add something here.

Job interviews: Tell me about yourself. Why do you want this role? What are your strengths? Where do you see yourself in five years?

Making friends: What do you do for fun? How long have you lived here? Have you seen anything good lately? We should do this again sometime.

Travelling abroad: Could you recommend somewhere to eat? How do I get to the station? Do you have this in a different size? Could you help me — I'm a bit lost.

For each situation, imagine the real setting and say your answers out loud as if the other person were there.

How to keep the conversation going

Topics get you started; these habits keep you talking:

- Always give a reason. After your answer, add “because…” It naturally doubles the length of what you say.
- Add an example. “For instance…” turns a short answer into a real one.
- Bounce it back. End with “What about you?” to keep a real conversation flowing.
- Don’t aim for perfect. Keep going even with small mistakes — fluency comes from not stopping.

The key is to practise these out loud, every day. Reading the questions silently does nothing; speaking the answers builds the skill. If you don’t have someone to talk to, an AI speaking partner like Yappply lets you work through topics like these in real conversations any time, and gives you feedback on how you did — turning this list into daily speaking practice that actually sticks.

Frequently asked questions

What are good English conversation topics for beginners? Concrete, personal topics work best: daily routine, family, food, home, hobbies, and the weather. Each lets you build simple sentences about things you already know.

How do I practice English conversation topics alone? Pick a topic, answer every question out loud in full sentences, then push one answer further with a reason or example. Record yourself to check your fluency, or use an AI speaking partner to practise them as real conversations.

How many questions should I answer per topic? Answer all the questions under a topic, then add your own follow-ups. Quality of speaking time matters more than the number — aim for 5–10 minutes of talking.

What topics come up in English speaking exams and interviews? Familiar ones: work or study, hometown, hobbies, and opinions on everyday issues. The “by situation” section above covers interview and small-talk questions directly.

How often should I practise with these topics? Daily, even for 10–15 minutes. A different topic each day keeps practice fresh and builds a wide range of vocabulary over time.
